

Fail

Failure is Feedback

Failure is not final and failure is not fatal. As long as we don't stop, and as long as we are willing to learn from our failures, they have no power to defeat us but only to educate us and make us better.

Discussion Questions

1. Who is one person who has significantly helped you get to where you're at? How did they help?
 2. Have you had the experience of "the track running out"? That moment when there was no clear "next step". Please share and describe.
 3. Have you ever experienced the fear of taking the wrong step or making the wrong choice? Please share and describe. Have you ever had a time when you needed to make a decision but you did not have the fear of failure? Please share and describe it.
 4. Successful people fail a lot, but they don't stop and they learn from their failure. Describe a time when you learned more from failure than you would have from immediate success.
 5. Failure can be a blessing because it will either give us clarity and conviction regarding our current direction, or it will give us the opportunity to make a course correction. Please share an experience when your failure either increased your conviction or adjusted your course.

God in Real Life

This week, choose to act in the face of fear of failure knowing that Jesus not only has a great call on your life but will also sustain you in whatever way you need.

To the Heart

"Jesus said: "My sheep hear my voice; I know them, and they follow Me." John 10:27
